Come face to face with an Albertosaurus, close to where geologist J.B. Tyrrell first found the bones of the fierce predator in 1884. Albertosaurus roamed southern Alberta more than 69 million years ago — well before the Royal Tyrrell Museum was named for the geologist. 1500 North Dinosaur Tr. Strap on a miner’s lamp and tour the Atlas Coal Mine National Historic Site. Follow in the steps of the town’s original coal miners as you climb through the conveyor tunnel and up the other side. Explore the dark side of coal mining as you learn about accidents, brawls, the women, and the unmentionable side of Drumheller history. If the supernatural is more your thing, embark on a ghost tour and learn about the accidents, brawls and subsequent mysterious sightings around the abandoned mine. Located 15 minutes east of Drumheller on Hoodoo Tr. (Hwy. 10), East Coulee, 403-822-2220, atlascoalmine.ab.ca
Drumheller’s Little Church opened its doors on July 9, 1958. The idea for the Little Church was conceived by Reverend Edgar C. O’Brien of the Pentecostal Church. O’Brien secured Robert “Bob” Gibson to design the church and paint its windows and Trygve “Tig” Seland to build the church. Over the years thousands of people have stopped the Little church to reflect, as they travel along the famous Dinosaur Trail.

3 Play a round of golf on Canada’s most challenging back nine. Nestled between coulees and badlands, Dinosaur Trail Golf & Country Club is a tricky course that has you hitting your ball up canyons. If your golfing leaves something to be desired, stick to the easier front nine and enjoy the view. 6455 North Dinosaur Tr. (Hwy. 838), Drumheller, 403-823-5622, dinosaurtrailgolf.com

4 Stand inside the mouth of the World’s Largest Dinosaur. Weighing in at a hefty 66,000 kilograms of mostly steel, Drumheller’s imposing T.rex is located next to the Visitor Information Centre. For a nominal fee, climb up a staircase lined with murals and into her mouth for a view of the surrounding badlands. At more than 26 metres tall, the T.rex is approximately four times larger than the real thing, which roamed the land 100 million years ago. 60 1 Ave. W., Drumheller, 1-866-823-8100

5 See how glaciers carved the land when you view down into Horseshoe Canyon, stepping over and around the lunar-like land features that have been whittled into curves by the wind. Or take a helicopter tour to see the layers in the earth where the ice receded. Go at sunrise for a postcard-perfect view tinged with vibrant orange. Located 10 minutes west of Drumheller on Highway 9.

Viewing Horseshoe Canyon

A glacier-carved “U” surrounded by golden prairie, the aptly named Horseshoe Canyon is a dramatic introduction to the badlands. The view from the parking lot lookout, 10 minutes west of downtown Drumheller on Highway 9, is as jaw-dropping as they get. Prepare for up to 40°C temperatures in the summer. After a rare prairie rain the mud on the canyon floor is thick and slick as yogurt. Arrive early to get an incomparable sunrise photo.

Finding Refuge in Horsethief Canyon

Horsethief Canyon works as well today as a hiding place from humanity as it did for outlaws more than a century ago. After driving about 10 kilometres west of the Royal Tyrrell Museum, turn left on a side road just off Highway 838 (a.k.a. North Dinosaur Trail). From there, find the trailhead for Horsethief Canyon, the equally beautiful but less-visited cousin of Horseshoe Canyon. Its out-of-the-way location and steep clay walls deter the unpractised from venturing down to the prairie grass and bushes below. Spend the afternoon admiring colourful layers of rock while picturing the thieves who gave the canyon its name hiding in the coulees and rebranding their stolen mares.

Walking Through History at Midland Provincial Park

The Royal Tyrrell Museum stands on the southwest corner of the 280-hectare Midland Provincial Park. A trailhead a few hundred metres east of the museum marks a one-kilometre-long loop, where interpretive signs recount the glacial forces that sculpted the badlands from 70-million-year-old layers of sedimentary rock. One or two kilometres east of this path is another self-guided tour through the remains of the Midland
Coal Mining Co., a relic of the area’s once-thriving coal industry. Explore the remnants among the hills, be they dino-bones or dilapidated mining equipment, but remember to leave everything the way you found it. (North of North Dinosaur Trail and east of Murray Road)

Making the Most of Drumheller’s Pathways

With 18 kilometres of pathways running alongside the Red Deer River, around downtown and to the doorstep of the Royal Tyrrell Museum, you can hit all the key sights by bike or on foot. Park your car at the world’s easiest-to-find Visitor Information Centre — underneath the tail of the 26-metre-tall World’s Largest Dinosaur just north of the town centre — and walk, bike or splash your way through the busy water park to the riverside pathway. Cross the bridge northwest toward the Royal Tyrrell Museum. Pause at the Homestead Museum and see everything from antique teacups to a two-headed calf. Or, skip the antiques and pop into Bumper Boat Amusements for a few hours of bumper boats and mini golf. Back on the path, continue several kilometres through the coulees and gullies that lead you right into the Royal Tyrrell Museum’s parking lot.
The Royal Tyrrell Museum of Palaeontology celebrates the spectacular diversity of life on Earth, from the tiniest grain of pollen to the mightiest dinosaur. This world-renowned Museum and research facility is situated in Midland Provincial Park, six kilometres northwest of Drumheller.

Canada’s only museum devoted exclusively to palaeontology—the study of plant and animal life based on the fossil record—offers something for everyone. Hundreds of thousands of people each year are captivated by one of the world’s largest collections of dinosaur skeletons, most of which were discovered in Alberta’s badlands— one of the best places in the world for fossil discoveries. As the primary repository for all fossils found in Alberta, the Museum’s collection is vast and diverse and used worldwide by palaeontological researchers.

In 2016, the Museum will unveil its first major new exhibit in several years. Opening May 20, Foundations will introduce visitors to the field of palaeontology and explain Alberta’s critical role in the preservation and scientific study of fossils globally. The exhibit will provide the basis for understanding the 3.9-billion-year-history of life on Earth as visitors experience an unparalleled journey through time.
All of the Museum’s dynamic displays spark curiosity, dispel myths, and engage people with learning. In the summer, visitors can also participate in educational programs that interpret how the past and present are related. Individuals and families alike can learn about the wonders of the badlands during a guided hike, create a cast of a real fossil, or try their hand at digging in a quarry.

While the Museum is open year-round, it can be very busy during the summer months, so it is recommended to register for programs in advance to secure your spot. The Museum also offers extended hours from May to September, and visiting in the evenings is an excellent option to avoid the crowds.

Owned and operated by Alberta Culture and Tourism, the Royal Tyrell Museum of Palaeontology is located five minutes northwest of Drumheller on Highway 838. For more information visit tyrrellmuseum.com or call 403-823-7707 (dial 310-0000 for toll-free access within Alberta).
The history of Drumheller is long and fascinating. Drumheller is known as the dinosaur capital of the world because of the high concentration of fossils located in the area. Millions of years ago the Drumheller area was tropical which created a great environment for plant growth and where dinosaurs could flourish. After a cataclysmic event, these dinosaurs were wiped out leaving only their bones to be discovered millions of years later. In the 1880’s, J.B. Tyrrell came to present-day Drumheller looking for coal and found the skull of a dinosaur near the Red Deer River. That dinosaur became known as the Albertasaurus and so began the collection of dinosaur remains that are sought after by museums all over the world.

Coal was eventually discovered as well. The Calgary-Drumheller railway was opened in 1913 bringing with it the many faces and families who would settle this new community with a profound sense of optimism and excitement. The first load of coal shipped out of the valley was from a Newcastle mine in 1911 by Jesse Gouge and Garnet Coyle who originally opened the mine. The Drumheller coal rush really heated up after Samuel Drumheller bought land in the valley from Thomas Greentree and sold it to the Canadian National Railway to develop a town site. A famous coin toss was made between Samuel Drumheller and Thomas Greentree to decide who would name the town. The coin fell in favor of Samuel Drumheller.

Between 1911 and 1979, 139 mines were registered in the valley and over 56 million tons of coal was shipped across Canada. Coal mining was a dangerous job, claiming the life of many miners. The names of these miners are commemorated on a special memorial located at 224 Centre Street. The Atlas Coal Mine was the last one to close down in 1979 signaling the end of the coal mining era in the valley. This structure and the coal mining history have been preserved at the original Atlas Coal Mine site at East Coulee, attracting and educating hundreds of visitors each year.

Today, agriculture is the biggest industry in the Drumheller followed closely by oil and gas production. These sectors employ hundreds of people in and around Drumheller. Tourism is the fastest growing industry in the town with thousands of people visiting the town each year to see the World’s Largest Dinosaur, Royal Tyrrell Museum, and Atlas Coal Mine just to name a few.

Thomas Belot (1882 – 1925)
In 1922, Belot came to Drumheller with wife Doris and their baby girl to work the mines. On Oct. 21, 1925, Belot’s day off, he took an extra shift for a sick co-worker. He was killed that day when a large rock fell on his back. Doris never remarried. When she died in 1985, she was buried next to him in the Drumheller Cemetery.
With the clunk of a lever, metal railcars shudder to life, beginning their journey through the Atlas Coal Mine National Historic Site. These open carts, once used to carry miners to the darkest reaches of Atlas No. 3, are now filled with fascinated visitors to the site. They lumber beneath sloping troughs through which coal was once distributed into the hopper cars of waiting trains, past unique historic buildings and through fields of equipment discarded during the mine’s period of operation between 1936 and 1956.

Later, visitors climb the narrow wooden shaft of the last standing wooden coal tipple in Canada, once used to prepare and load coal for transportation to market. Walking hundreds of feet along a thick rubber conveyor belt, visitors hear anecdotes about the young miners who worked there. They learn how the tipple and its equipment sorted and preserved the freshly mined coal — from dusty “nuts” and fist-sized “eggs” to the much larger “lumps.”

Donning hard-hats and lamps, visitors shiver as they enter the cool stillness of the mineshaft. Typical of mines in the badlands, this is an uphill hike to where coal deposits are visible externally in the black rings of the hoodoos. The mine is dark and full of mystery, and when all the headlamps are extinguished it’s impossible to see even an inch ahead. At the end of the shaft, visitors find themselves at the height of Atlas Coal Mine #3, with breathtaking views of the valley below. The tour continues with glimpses of the ongoing mine restoration and a walk around the blacksmith’s shop.

As such a spectacular tribute to the Drumheller Valley’s mining history, it’s no surprise this was chosen as the location for a stage of the Amazing Race Canada reality TV competition in 2013.

It was a time that shaped Drumheller’s identity.
Between 1911 and 1965, coal was king, and it seemed the boom would never end. Brothels, brawlers, bootleggers and all the other characters of a halfcentury of coal mining helped make Drumheller the “Wonderland of the West.”

The story began in 1911 when the Newcastle Coal Co. started shipping home-heating coal via rail from Drumheller’s first commercial mine. Within a year, eight mines were operating in the area. When Newcastle set up shop, Drumheller had 50 residents; by the late 1920s, the population was around 10,000.

Drumheller’s growth earned it many nicknames. “Canada’s Miracle City” attracted men (and boys as young as 12) from Europe, the U.S. and eastern Canada to work the mines. But in the early days of the coal boom, the thousands who came seeking work had their own name for Drumheller: Hell’s Hole.

Miners suffered winter in canvas tents or mining company houses — “chicken coops” — often with no electricity, plumbing or heat. Miners had to buy their own tools and equipment at inflated prices from the company stores.

Drumheller’s nefarious reputation, which persisted into the 1960s, was a result of the miners’ everyday struggles. More than 200 were killed in the mines, and many more were maimed, burned or fell ill. Every labour right earned by the mine workers was fought for with clashes against union-busting spies and armed “constables” hired by mine operators during dozens of labour strikes in the Drumheller valley.

But for every bleak account of Drumheller’s mining days, there’s an accompanying story of resilience, camaraderie or heroism.

Hundreds, like Gertrude Charters — a Volunteer Aid Detachment worker from Carmangay, Alta. — came to Drumheller in 1918 to treat those ravaged by the worldwide Spanish influenza epidemic. Despite the flu being compared to medieval Europe’s Black Plague, Charters worked fearlessly saving lives.

Between 1911 and 1965, a staggering 60 million tons of coal were shipped from the 139 registered mines in the Drumheller valley. The Leduc oil strike of 1947, however, was the beginning of the end of the coal boom. Canadians soon chose cleaner oil and natural gas to heat their homes and, by the 1970s, Drumheller’s coal industry had tapered off. The Atlas Coal Mine was, in 1984, the last to close.

As Drumhellerite Marion Smith writes in her poem To the Old Miners, the miners are gone but not forgotten: “Their labours warmed a million homes, gripped by the prairie winter’s cold; across all Western Canada, they burned Drumheller coal.”

Miners suffered winter in canvas tents or mining company houses — “chicken coops” — often with no electricity, plumbing or heat.
The Drumheller DinoArts Association is a volunteer group that fundraises to maintain the dinosaur-related artwork and sculptures in and around the Drumheller valley.

Currently there are over 30 dinosaur sculptures, some of which were originally built in the 1960’s. Each year new dinosaurs are added, and volunteers give the old ones a fresh coat of paint. Can you find them all?
If you should find yourself hankering for a cold beverage while experiencing Alberta’s badlands, take the Highway 10X turnoff from Highway 10 just east of Drumheller and head toward the tiny hamlet of Wayne.

Along the six-kilometre stretch that follows, you’ll traverse no fewer than 11 one-lane metal bridges. Carrying traffic over the winding Rosebud River and the now-defunct railway tracks — once used to transport coal through local mining communities — these spans are in the Guinness Book of World Records as the most bridges to be found within the shortest distance.

But this bonanza of bridges isn’t the only notable thing you’ll find. Here in Wayne, 11 kilometres southeast of Drumheller, stands one of the last relics remaining from a once booming mining community — the century-old Rosedeer Hotel and its original bar, the Last Chance Saloon. Rumour has it the saloon got its name because it is, in fact, the last chance for a drink for 65 kilometres, or a day’s ride on horseback.

Its nickname, though, was “the Bucket of Blood,” because of the numerous fights that occurred there. Among these was a close call in the early 1970s that left three bullet holes in the wall. The story goes that three hooligans refused to pay for their drinks, so the barman calmly pulled out a .45-calibre handgun and fired three rounds over their heads. They then paid and left — swiftly.

During the area’s mining heyday, there were 139 coal mines in the Drumheller Valley, the first of which opened in 1911. The last load of coal shipped out in 1979. Six of the mines were in Wayne. “And wherever there was a coal mine, a community sprang up, so people could walk to work,” says Julia Fielding, executive director of the Atlas Coal Mine National Historic Site.

The tiny town was once home to 3,000 people, and at least 30 different languages could be heard in the mines and on the streets of Wayne. It was also the first centre in the area to boom and bust.

ind your way through the Rosebud River Valley past badlands and wheat fields, and you’ll find a rural gem — one of Alberta’s longest-running professional theatre companies. Rosebud Theatre began in 1973, when youth pastor and teacher LaVerne Erickson opened a summer arts camp in the hamlet of Rosebud, a 30-minute drive from Drumheller via highways 9 and 840. The camp evolved into a private high school and, eventually, into the post-secondary Rosebud School of the Arts and Rosebud Theatre.

At capacity, Rosebud’s main venue, the 230-seat Opera House, can more than double the hamlet’s population. In 2003, a second stage was added with seating for 65. Each year, more than 35,000 visitors see shows ranging from dramas to musicals, performed by staff, guest artists and students.

Theatre tickets include a buffet meal prepared by head chef Kosta Galanos across the street in the renovated century-old Rosebud Mercantile, also home to Wild Horse Jack’s Grill, Rosebud Gifts & Crafts and a conference centre. Nearby, the historic United Church contains Akokiniskway Gallery and Rosebud Creek Recording Studio.

It’s art with southern Alberta heart.

Over 200 actors on Canada’s Largest Stage

Canadian Badlands Passion Play

Experience firsthand the premier performance of the Gospel of Luke
Weekends from July 8 – 24

TheatreInTheBadlands.com
For over two decades, the Canadian Badlands Passion Play has been transporting audiences back 2,000 years in time with its dramatic depiction of the life of Jesus Christ.

The elaborate three-hour production — complete with live animals and more than 200 actors dressed in authentic period costumes — takes place each July in a 2,700-seat outdoor amphitheatre surrounded by the iconic badlands coulees on the outskirts of Drumheller.

Within the gentle curve of the amphitheatre seating lies the largest drama stage in Canada. The stage is the size of six football fields and includes a number of large set pieces that evoke the feeling of Herod’s temple and palace of ancient Jerusalem.

The amphitheatre’s acoustics are ideal for large audiences, and a new state-of-the-art sound system ensures that no one will miss a word of the new script for 2016 based on the gospel of Luke and written specifically for the Badlands Stage. The 2016 rendition of the story is unique for it will be the first time in the history of the Badlands Passion Play that the play will begin with Mary and Joseph on their way to Bethlehem.

The Passion Play has attracted over a quarter of a million visitors since its first performance in 1994. Even when it’s not on, the site is worth a quick detour should you find yourself in the area — the three crosses on a hill overlooking the site are a continual reminder of the play’s dramatic conclusion.

Other events at the site include the Canadian Icons Concert on August 6th featuring Blue Rodeo and a Shakespeare festival at the end of August. Check the website below for further information.

Eight actors have played Jesus over 23 years.

There is a special manual for the scene in which the actor playing Jesus Christ is raised onto the cross.

From rehearsal to the final performance, the Passion Play takes 11 weeks to produce.

Yearly production costs for the play are $100,000 per show of which tickets raise half of the required budget.

The Passion Play goes through changes each year to keep the story fresh for both actors and audiences.

Join us for a charming glimpse into the 1930s. Bring your family and indulge in the memories of yesteryear as you visit the Village of Dorothy, population 7. Dorothy is a timeless little community seven minutes east of the Atlas Coal Mine on Secondary Highway 570, which runs along the Red Deer River.

Dorothy is located near the intersections of Secondary Highways 570 and 848. Our quaint, historic village allows a real-life view of one hundred years of ranching, farming families and traditions.

Discover what the life of a bachelor was like at a rural school, fish at the river and explore a picturesque valley as beautiful as anything you might find on a postcard.

Dorothy is also the home of two restored churches that capture the true beauty of the rural 1930s architecture. One was originally transformed from a family home while the other was adapted from an early school house. During the ten-year restoration project that spanned from 2005 to 2015, the community thrived on maintaining an authentic settler lifestyle.

The drive offers incredible Badlands scenery and when you arrive, the Bulletin Board features a touring map of Dorothy.

Cottonwood Corner Campground is open six months of the year and features cabins, tenting and free showers.

Or if you’re daring, try the canoe shuttle, a 4–6 day tour down the Red Deer River from Newcastle Park in Drumheller to Dinosaur Provincial Park. It features some Class 1 rapids and is a fine run for novice river paddlers with some good leadership. Contact Willie at 403-442-2207 and say that Linda referred you.

Different campgrounds in Drumheller offer various levels of amenities and services for couples, families, groups of friends, and singles who wish to enjoy the camping experience.

Camping is for everyone and it is all about having fun and exploring the outdoors. There are two types of camping: frontcountry camping and backcountry camping. Frontcountry camping is the most popular because campers can drive right up to a campsite. These campgrounds are busiest because they offer more amenities and facilities including showers, flush toilets, theatres, playgrounds, snack bars, interpretive programming, golf courses and some have swimming pools.

Serviced campsites generally offer electrical, sewer and water hook-ups for RV’s, trailers tent trailers etc. and each campsite varies in price range. Usually, the more amenities that are available at the campground, the greater the price it is for using the campsite. Note that these serviced campsites are mainly utilized by RV’s so it may not be ideal areas for tents but check with the park prior to arriving.

Unserviced campsites are more suitable for tenting since they offer tent pads, plus amenities such as flush toilets, showers and potable water are close-by. RVers and tenters that do not require hookups can use unserviced campsites if alternative serviced campsites are not available.

Pull-through campsites are labeled as such since they are meant for RVers who tow larger RV’s or drive Class A Motorhomes. There is an entrance and exit which allows RVers to pull thought the site rather than turning back to exit. This set up is especially convenient for RVers who own big rigs, fifth wheels, or long travel trailers that make it easier to maneuver through a campground.

Walk-in campsites can be accessed just by walking to them, but you cannot drive your vehicle directly to a campsite. However, there is usually a parking lot close by where you can leave your vehicle while camping. Note that these campgrounds have fewer amenities than the serviced and unserviced campsites.

Groups of all sizes can reserve group campsites as they are designed for this purpose. Contact the local campground directly for information on the location of group campsites and what is available.

Camping is a great way to unwind and de-stress with the whole family. Booking a campsite and planning a route are crucial to a good experience. Check out the comparative campground information on pages 42 & 43 of this guide for a great starting point.

Throw your camping gear into your vehicle. Pack up your RV. Head out for an adventure! No tent, no problem. Rent a teepee or cabin, Drumheller campgrounds offer plenty of options. Camping is a great way to reconnect with friends and family, enjoy nature and explore new locations.

Take in the educational and fun filled activities the valley has to offer. Tour the amazing badlands. Walk or cycle the miles of trails. Check out the downtown shopping and cafes. Then return to the campground and relax. Pull out your lawn chairs. Start a campfire. Visit with friends and family and plan your next day!

DRUMHELLER’S SHOPPING SCENE

by Nicole Forrest

Unbaked hoodoos gleam under a big blue Alberta sky in a breathtaking large-format print by photographer Michael Todor. Hanging in 3rd Avenue Arts, 20 3rd Ave. W., the image takes you right to the time and place where it was captured.

And it’s not alone. It hangs alongside hundreds of art pieces by fellow Western Canadian artisans, including glittering geodetic glass jewelry and reclaimed steel artifacts transformed into whimsical art pieces. The store is just one of the shops in downtown Drumheller’s Gallery Row, which includes Jungling Works only a half-block away.

Drumheller’s historic town centre offers a wealth of charming shops that combine the unique and beautiful with everyday essentials.

Check out The Faux Den and Dry Canyon Collectables, along with artisan works, health food, antiques, spas, clothing, quilts, flowers and even tall, hand-crafted totem poles. And of course you’ll find groceries, gas, pharmacies and banks.

The town often puts its own unique spin on shopping and services — there’s BuyGone General Store (a combined pawn shop and fudgery), for example, alongside chain stores such as Walmart, The Brick and Shoppers Drug Mart. Marilyn’s Fashion and Aesthetic and Merle Norman Cosmetic Studios provide two fabulous stores under one roof for a one-stop shopping experience.

And of course, there are ample shopping opportunities for those seeking souvenirs of a prehistoric variety. The Fossil Shop, the World’s Largest Dinosaur Gift Shop and the Royal Tyrrell Museum Gift Shop all offer different and unique souvenirs that capture the spirit of Dinosaur Trail.
